Q1) Read the passage below and answer the following questions .

[25]

In a village in Assam lived a chief of the Garo tribe and his wife. They had a daughter. When the girl grew up, her marriage was arranged. On the way before the wedding, the mother of the bride took her aside and told her, "I am giving you garments made of the softest silk, ornaments made of gold and studded with precious stones. But I'm giving you one more wedding gift. That is the most precious of them all,"

The mother unlocked a wooden casket and took out a wrap made of silk and embroidered with a thousand flowers in all the colours of the rainbow. It dazzled the eye. "Oh, Mother!" cried the girl, stretching out her hand eagerly to touch the wrap. But her mother snatched it away. "Don't you touch the wrap before you have chanted a magic spell that I shall teach you. A great disaster shall befall anyone who touches the wrap without first chanting the spell," she cautioned.

Years rolled by. The chief and his wife grew old. The wrap still remained in the girl's possession . Once a year she took it out, aired it and locked it away. She never forgot to chant the magic spell before touching the wrap. But her husband did not know anything about the spell.

One day the chief's daughter laid out the wrap in the open. Then she went out to the river to get some fish for a meal. While she was away, thunder clouds gathered in the sky and it began to rain. Her husband was alarmed. He knew the wrap would be spoilt by the rain. So he ran and grabbed the wrap to bring it indoors. But the moment he touched the wrap, he turned into a large bird with beautiful feathers and tail. Just then his wife came rushing in. She caught hold of one end of the wrap, trying to snatch it away from her husband. But as soon as she touched it she turned into a female bird. These two became the peacock and peahen. The man had caught a much larger portion of the magic wrap, so the peacock's feathers are far more brightly coloured than those of the peahen. The peacock remains India's most beautiful bird.
